Schiel concentrates on his personal experiences and their political context four years after the devastating Israeli attacks of Operation Cast Lead. The plight and struggles of Gazan youth is the main theme. The Arab Spring, a series of uprisings in the Middle East, is the larger context. He explores the lives of people still living in tents and in recently constructed rudimentary dwellings. They continue to suffer the ongoing Israeli siege and internal political violence, while being ignored by most of the international community.
