What would happen if every one of us in Cambridge started to talk about domestic violence, dating violence and different forms of abuse in relationships? What if YOU, your friends, your family, your neighbors, your co-workers could be part of a whole new way of creating community change: by asking questions to mobilize action?

Join us as we begin our interactive campaign – ask a question, learn ways to get involved, find out more information about resources in Cambridge

21 Days of Questions, 365 Days of Action is a community engagement project developed by the office of City Councilor Marjorie Decker in collaboration with Transition House, Engage the Power, Cambridge Women's Commission, Cambridge Public Health Department, Community Development Department, Department of Human Services, Youth Action Corps, Cambridge Multi-Service Center, Cambridge Community Television, MIT, Harvard University, Cambridge College, Violence Transformed and the Victims of Violence program at Cambridge Health Alliance.
