NTanya Lee, a long-time organizer, convened progressive alliances between working-class Black and Latino community organizations and white-led LGBT groups in NY and Michigan to fight a wave of anti-gay initiatives pushed by the Religious Right. For eleven years, she worked with Coleman advocates, which builds the power of Black and Latino families to win education, housing and budget justice in San Francisco.

Steve Williams organized against poverty and homelessness with the Philadelphia Union of the Homeless and the San Francisco Coalition on Homelessness. He cofounded POWER (People Organized to Win Employment Rights), a community-based organization of low-income and working class tenants, transit riders and workers. Steve has been active in a number of local, national and international movements, including the World Social Forum, Grassroots Global Justice, Right to the City, SF Rising and Standing Together to Organize a Revolutionary Movement (STORM).
